Biographical/ Historical Note (DACS 2.7 & 10)

The New Mexico Museum of Art is a division of the New Mexico Department of Cultural Affairs. The Museum of Art is one of four state museums in Santa Fe, eight historic sites statewide, and the Office of Archaeological Studies that comprises the Museum of New Mexico System. The Museum of New Mexico Foundation raises funds for Museum of Art exhibitions and educational programs.

When the New Mexico Museum of Art opened in 1917 it was the first building in the state dedicated to art. Its galleries, reception areas and St. Francis auditorium were made by the people of New Mexico for the promotion of the state's rich culture to visitors and locals alike. The architects Isaac Hamilton and William Morris Rapp designed the building as an enlarged and modified version of the building they made for the 1915 Panama-California Exposition in San Diego. The style of the building, called Pueblo Revival, uses modern construction materials made to look like the historic adobe churches found throughout the state's Pueblos. Throughout its century-long history, the museum has grown and redefined itself to adapt to changes in art and museum practices.

The current name, The New Mexico Museum of Art, was adopted in 2007 to reflect the breadth of New Mexico art. Its previous name, "The Museum of Fine Arts" had been adopted in 1962.

NOTE: The material in this sub-series relates to the so-called McNary Pipe Organ, which was originally installed in the El Paso, Texas home of Mr. and Mrs. James McNary (hereafter JGM). When the time came for the couple to move, it was sold to the School of American Research [SAR], later becoming the property of the New Mexico Museum of Art.

The correspondence and records digested in these pages deal in large measure with constant repairs and renovations which the organ required before and after its sale by the McNary couple in 1936. All letters and other material will be listed by dates and parties involved. Only the contents of those with special significance will be digested.
