FOREWORD

Indian artists from all over the United States were invited to submit two entries to the Fifth Annual juried exhibition of American Indian paintings. Accepted for the exhibition were forty-five professional and thirty-four student works. Represented are Pueblo, Navajo, Creek, Hopi, Apache, Choctaw, Creek-Seminole, Creek-Cherokee, Osage and Ottawa artists. Purchase prizes and cash awards totaling $360.00 were made available by the Museum of New Mexico Art Gallery, School of American Research, Southwestern Association on Indian Affairs, Inc., Millicent A. Rogers Foundation, and individual donors. Paintings selected from the exhibition will be incorporated in a nation-wide traveling show which is also sponsored by the Art Gallery. These paintings are sent out to acquaint and educate the public with contemporary Indian paintings of quality.

These annual American Indian painting exhibitions have encouraged many young Indian artists. They have realized that they have something wonderful and unique to contribute to the art world. They have also found that fine Indian art is in demand throughout the nation.

Art lovers throughout the United States, especially in Santa Fe, have done much to encourage and promote the Indian Art movement. It is because of this encouragement that the Santa Fe Indian School Arts and Crafts program is now being reactivated. This program will be in full swing beginning with the fall term. Indian students from all over the United States and Alaska who meet the criteria for enrollment will be accepted. There will be an open house on August 15th at the Art Studio and the Arts and Crafts Department at the Santa Fe Indian School to which the public is invited.

In this show one will find traditional Indian painting as well as modern contemporary art. They are modern in style yet ancient in symbolism — which is part of the daily life of an Indian.
